Abstract

P system is an interesting computing model of natural computing exhibiting very nice decidability and complexity results. As a language generating device, P system produces formal languages. In this paper, a variant of P system called rewriting P system is considered and its generative power of yielding pattern languages is investigated.

References

Index Terms

Computer Science
Pattern Recognition

Keywords

Pattern grammars, rewriting P systems with unique parallelism