Abstract

In this paper, a low complexity up to 200-Gb/s is analyzed over a 38-km standard single mode fiber transmission system in the 1310-nm wavelength domain. The system is based exclusively on semiconductor component without any form of dispersion compensation. The results showed that the 1310-nm wavelength domain can support low cost and low complexity high speed transmission.

References

- J. P. Turkiewicz, A. M. J. Koonen, G. D. Khoe, and H. Waardt, "Do we need
Performance Analysis of 200-Gb/s Low Complexity Transmission in Second Window

Index Terms

Computer Science

Communication Systems

Keywords

Optical fiber communication electro absorption modulator semiconductor optical amplifier wavelength division multiplexing