Abstract

Good governance is characterized by skill, collaboration, transparency and openness which are the results of effective communication. Three key areas Communication Planning Process (GCPP), Government Communication Assessment Process (GCAP) and Government Communication Improvement Process (GCIP) have been identified and the catalytic impact that ICT has in these key area has been discussed.

Reference

- Kristiina Luht, (2002), Reforming government – citizen relationship in the information age, Tallinn Pedagogical University, Faculty Of Social Sciences, Department Of Information Studies,
Leveraging the Communicative Mechanisms of Governance: On the Threshold of New E-Governance in India

Tallinn 2002.

Index Terms

Computer Science  Information Technology

Key words

Good Governance  Government Communication
Planning Process (GCPP)
Government Communication Assessment Process (GCAP)

Government Communication Improvement Process (GCIP)
E-Governance
ICT
Leveraging the Communicative Mechanisms of Governance: On the Threshold of New E-Governance in India