Using Memory Transfer Language (MTL) as a Tool for Program Dry-running

Abstract

In this paper, the use of visualization techniques in teaching and learning programming is revisited. It is demonstrated that MTL can be used to visualize most of programming aspects. MTL, as a tool for dry-running programs, tracing and correcting codes is used in a class experiment. Results show that MTL can be used in teaching novice programmers to improve their coding abilities.

References

- Dehnadi, S. and Bonart, R. 2006. The Camel has Two Humps (working title). School of Computing, Middlesex University, UK.

Index Terms

Computer Science

Information Sciences

Keywords

Program visualization Memory Transfer Language (MTL) comprehension program dry-running