Abstract
The realization of a novel concept of photonic switching using photonic crystal fiber is presented in this paper. With the introduction of Kerr nonlinearity into a photonic crystal fiber, the phenomenon of optical switching has got redefined. The proposed scheme involves that the transmission intensity applied to the fiber can be switched from maximum to minimum with the application of suitable phase difference in between the input and the control signal. All the simulations are implemented by Finite Difference Time Domain method.

References

Index Terms

Computer Science Communication

Keywords
Finite Difference Time Domain Method; Kerr Nonlinearity; Photonic Crystal Fiber; Photonic Switching.